Nice little experience similar in concept to The Blu, and also in a similar price bracket (considering this is just one scenario whereas The Blu has three). Where The Blu offers a realistic underwater setting, this one's more of a fantasy/sci-fi one high up in the air. The classical music can be replaced by one's own and the length of the experience adjusted accordingly. Yes, it's only about 6 minutes of content, but I for one am not regretting the purchase.. shut up and just buy it. I like the idea but this isn't worth $5. - you can use different music with it but the stock audio effects are mediocre at best and not immersive. - it's 'Impossible' but you're standing in tulips. With some mushrooms nearby and a cherry tree in blossom above. Plus a familiar looking flying whale. If this had some truly strange environment, boundaries that don't break immersion when you near the edge to look down, a decent audio soundscape, the ability to move or perhaps teleport to other spots/return to the travel bureau and choose other destinations then yes. TheBlu, Temple of Aspara, Irrational Exuberance are better demos and if i wanted to sit and listen to an album i'd be inclined to do it in something like SkyTower.. A standard VR demo consisting of visuals for two songs, about 5 minutes each. Since it totals about 10 minutes of entertainment (with some fair moments of boredom thrown in because it takes slightly too long for something new to happen) for 5 bucks, it's very poor value. I got this in a bundle, or I would have refunded it. There are plenty of similar experiences for free here and, for Rift users, in the Oculus store (Senza Peso and Transition come to mind). Also, one of the two experiences is just a halloweenified version of the first, with much of the same visuals except with an attempt (and partial failure) at being creepy. If it were free, my vote would have been positive. But it's not worth its asking price.. Not a bad experience as such but it just does not run very smoothly on my i7 4790k with 32GBs of RAM, Geforce GTX 1070 with 8GBs of RAM under windows 8.1 using my HTC Vive. As such if they can get it running better I would give it a positive review but at the moment I cant really use it as a demo for friends so I will need to request a refund. But I do like the idea and art work so if they can optimize it to run better and add in a little more interaction I would happily change my review.. I enjoyed the experience, very relaxing, beautiful environment. However, I was hoping for something more. It builds up, but nothing very interesting happens. I would say the price is a bit steep as well, this experience is worth 3 dollars at most. As a fellow developer, I recommend lowering the price on this a bit..
